POWER OF PARENTAL AFFECTION. Who would not willingly hallow the memory of one sacrificing his life in demonstrating the power of this affection? The eye almost unconsciously grows dim with sympa-thetic tears as we behold the noble heroism which displayed itself in the character of James L Geary, esq, local editor of the St. Louis Leader, at the recent calamitous fire in that city which destroyed the Pacific Hotel. His injuries, ensuing in death on the 26th ult., were received, as stated by the Republican, "in consequence of returning to hiroom-No. 10, on the third floor of the hotel -to rescue his little daughter. Having proviously dragged his wife, through the sufforcating smoke which had prostrated her, to a place of salety, he rushed through the fire to his daughter Florence. Finding it impossible to return as he came, he threw a mattress from the window which fronted on Seventh street to the balcony at the second story, and dropped her upon it in safety. He then jumped and cut his foot deeply. Throwing the mattress to the ground, he again dropped her upon it in safety. In the attempt to de-seend by a ladder, his injuries overcame him, and he fell to the cellar beneath, whence he was then extricated."

Here, indeed, did the pure promptings of a poble heart realize life's sweetness and its pains in braving danger to rescue the pledge of parental affection. Poor Geary, though he perished, freely vielding up all that gave him identity upon earth, as a willing sacrifice in the rescue of a loved daughter, still the memory of his deeds will be embalmed in affection's shrine as long as the sacred name of parent gains respectful utterance. We know not what may have been the peculiar traits or character of this unfortunate man; eure it is be has given the strongest testimo-ny in favor of both copjugal and parental affection that earth can ask or heaven require. The great pet has said, illustrative of that love known only to a parent's heart: -

"Unreasonable creatures fear their young, And though man's face be fearful to their eyes, Yet, in protection of their tender ones, Who hath not seen them, even with those wings Which sometimes they have used with fearful daring of this gallant father, without realizing purer and deeper filial obligations, doubly consecrating its duties of dependence. obedience and love. If little Florence, the surviving daughter, whose preservation and life cost her father's danger and death, survivee, she may yet, in aftertime, experience consolation in knowing that-

"When our souls shall leave this dwelling, The glory of one fair and virtuous action Is above all the escutcheons on our tomb, Or silken banners o'er us."

Treasuring his memory with that fondness which it must ever inspire, in her closing bours, when life's lamp is flickering to its socket, may she exclaim-"It haunnts me still, though many a year has iled.

Like some sweet melody."-Balt. Pat.

MISS JULIANA MAY.

We take great pleasure in publishing the following extract from a letter, dated Philadelphia, and addressed to the editor of the Missouri Republican, in regard to this favorite "child of song:"

"I wish some of our musical St. Louis friends (says the letter) had been at a concert at the Musical Fund Hall on Thursday last, given by Mis Juliana May, for the benefit of the 'Home for Friendless Children,' (a noble charity,) assisted by the Germania bend and Signor Rudolphson. The concert was eminently successful, and this highlygifted young artiste appeared with great effect. As much as I had heard of her, I was not prepared for such a musical treat. Her voice is of unquestionable beauty, a soprano of wide range, possessing notes of the middle register, strong and sweet, with the most unusual combination of rich, low notes of contralto timbre. But this is not all; her method is faultless, her execution brilliant and casy, with total absence of apparent effort. 'Her first piece, 'Ah non Credea,' from La

Sonnambula, with its allegro finale, were given most effectually; the dramatic pathos of the introductions being only equalled by the joyous, I may say sparkling animation of 'Ab non Giunge,' the variations at the close displaying to perfection the rich resources of her voice. The cavatina from 'Linda' was rapturously encored; but that which, in stage parlance, fairly brought down the house,' was the Bolero from 'Les Vespres Siciliennes,' replete, as you knw, with vocal eccentricities peculiar to Verde. Cruvelli, for whom it was written, frequently broke down in this song; and the magnificent style in which Miss May sang it throughout, and repeated it, fully establishes her as a cantatrice of the first class. I might in like manner comment on the successes which followed, but I cannot adequately convey to you the delight imparted by Miss May, to a crowded, brilliant, and highly appreciative audience. I may remark en passant that on this occasion time in this country; the result proving that her forte is opera, to which her studies have been chiefly directed. Can we not hope to call our talented young countrywoman to St. Louis, and greet her with a welcome equal at least to that accorded to artistes who have
